Miloradulemeklegijaknjigakrajpdf12 DOWNLOAD: Milorad Ulemek, also known as Milorad Lukovi (ä³ä»•ä», è¨ä°ÿ ä»Žä»,ä°Žä³) and "Legia". He sought to develop linguistics and philosophy in dispute and wrote an idealistic work on literary criticism called "Selected Philosophical Problems" (). In addition, he wrote essays on some Slavic peoples. Milorad Ulendikov was born in the village of Kamenka in central Serbia. His family was engaged in the cultivation of grapes, leather production and the sale of tobacco. After the death of his parents, his grandfather promised to continue the family business. In 1914 he went to Germany to study mathematics at the University of Tübingen. In Germany, he became friends with the future friend of Blaise Pascal from Königsberg, Gerhard Frader. After finishing his studies at the university, he returned to the Ottoman Empire, where he continued his studies and settled in Nis. During the First World War, contrary to the prohibition of the authorities, Ulendis worked in a camp for repatriates who accompanied conscripts to Serbian soil. He oversaw the deportation of the Serbs. In 1922, he published Political Philosophy in Emigration (another title is Emigrant Politics and the Utopian Theory of Socialism). With the outbreak of the First World War, he worked in the field of ethnography, oriental studies and linguistics. After the end of the First World War in 1920, he moved to Paris, where he took up literary activities. In 1925, Milorad returned to Turkey, where he settled in Istanbul. Then he began to study philosophy and started teaching the philosophy of religion at the universities of Istanbul. In 1928, together with Gevorg Chakhalov and Ioann Petelich, he founded Legia. Lectures were held at the seminary at the Zorats-Karer monastery, where he taught philosophy. In 1930 he settled in the monastery of Sevastianos, near Belgrade, where he taught seminars on philosophy and religion. On May 19, 1933, Milorad Ulendika was awarded a scholarship at Kazan University, in connection with which he left for Kazan. In Kazan, he gave lectures on the philosophy of religion, and also organized
