Saudi Arabia and Turkey on Tuesday announced in principle a deal to reduce the price of oil by $1 per barrel over five years. The ministers of the two countries, both important suppliers of oil to Europe, agreed that the price will be cut to $70 a barrel in July 2017. They also agreed that their OPEC oil-producing allies will all announce the same agreement to end the price war in April. That will be based on the Saudi price, but will apply to all oil-producing nations. That announcement was to be made on April 25 in Vienna. On Tuesday, Saudi Energy Minister Khalid Al-Falih said that there is a "global consensus" that prices are too high. "The agreement is within reach. There are no obstacles on the ground," Al-

Falih said. "The Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, we have discussed it [the cut in the price of oil] in the last two days in Vienna, and we have agreed on a plan to adjust the price $1 per barrel to $70 a barrel and we will adjust in April," he said. In Turkey, Energy Minister Taner Yildiz said: "We are now in a dialogue to reach an agreement between ourselves and OPEC and non-OPEC partners" and to make that announcement. "The agreement will be announced on April 25, 2017, and we are also ready to increase our oil production," he added. Yildiz said that the agreement, which will start next year, would bring down the price of oil by $1 per barrel every six months, bringing the price to $70 in July 2017. Yildiz said the agreement reflected the price of $70 that Turkey agreed with the United States, following the recent purchase of a missile defense system. "We have witnessed a price hike from under $40 per barrel to $70 per barrel. We would like the price of oil to drop to $60 per barrel," he added. Relations between the United States and Iran have improved, paving the way for the much-anticipated agreement between the countries to end Iran's nuclear program. This price ceiling for OPEC is the first that has ever been set on the world market, since the cartel only has a binding agreement with its members. The price of oil was $147 a barrel in September 2014, and is now just over $50 a barrel. Last week, oil prices fell to $

Evaluation of a therapeutic pipeline for the control of cutaneous leishmaniasis in Colombia. Cutaneous leishmaniasis (CL) is a neglected, vector-borne parasitic disease caused by the promastigote of a species of the genus Leishmania. The World Health Organization has classified CL as a disease of moderate epidemic potential. In Colombia, more than 200,000 cases have been estimated, and CL is one of the most significant health problems. Although the population impact of the disease remains low, the potential severity is substantial for the population, as it increases the incidence of other infectious diseases such as tuberculosis and HIV. Here, the design, development, and evaluation of a therapeutic pipeline for CL in Colombia are presented. In Colombia, the species of the genus Leishmania responsible for CL is L. (V.) guyanensis, and L. (L.) amazonensis. The drugs used in the pipeline are meglumine antimoniate (Glucantime, Sanofi Aventis), liposomal amphotericin B (AmBisome, Gilead Sciences), and paromomycin (Sparclon, Laboratorios Farfan, Colombia). The purpose of the therapeutic pipeline is to offer appropriate therapeutic alternatives to communities that are not covered by the Colombian leishmaniasis control program. Furthermore, the pipeline will promote research and development in these neglected diseases.UPS ground transportation vehicles include integrated vehicle tracking systems that provide location information, such as, position and speed information, for ground vehicles. Such integrated tracking systems are described in U.S. Pat. No. 8,511,812, assigned to Carrier Corporation of St. Louis, Mo. The integrated vehicle tracking system determines the position of a ground vehicle by transmitting a signal to the vehicle, which then replies with its position. The signal includes a start bit and a group of digital bits representing the vehicle's location. The integrated vehicle tracking system converts the digital bits to a continuous stream of vehicle position data. The vehicle position data may be relayed to a central computer that determines the location of the vehicle. The integrated vehicle tracking system transmits the position data to a central location, such as a location server, via a communication network. The communication network may be any combination of electrical and/or non-electrical means for transmitting or relaying information. The integrated vehicle tracking system may be in the form of a telematics unit that is embedded in a vehicle to wirelessly communicate with a
