Inside the 'Glitter Room' of the White House The Congress today is grappling with the price of treatment for HIV infected people in the run-up to one of the worst winters on record in the US. The cost of the drugs needed to treat HIV infections has shot up, with the cost of a single month's supply running into the tens of thousands of dollars. The only drug which provides effective treatment for people with HIV is the combination of antiretroviral drugs, which are priced at a premium compared to the average drug price. A study conducted at the Department of Health and Human Services found that the average cost of HIV treatment can vary between $16,000 and $19,000 a year. However, treatment is not just a cost to the government. The study shows that the average price of a patient's antiretroviral therapy per month in the 13 US states where private insurance is the primary source of coverage ranges from $8,400 to $11,400. Even the lowest cost plan in the study is around $18,000 per year. This means that those with HIV, who are already amongst the most vulnerable population, are being pushed further into poverty and destitution by the rising cost of their treatment. While private insurance plans pay for treatment the gap between what patients have to pay out of pocket and what private plans cover, some patients have found that b7e8df5c8
