(You know, the first NFL game in the Super Bowl era was played in January.) Via NBC's Peter King, the league has entered into an agreement with the National Football Foundation, to use a new logo for the league's annual awards show. The logo, which'll be used on awards shows and throughout the league's website, was designed by Boston-based agency The15Fold. The logos that were unveiled the other day as part of a wider redesign of the league's logo and its helmet font that debuted at the start of the season are the old Bob Pettit Medal for the Artistic Achievement Trophy, the George S. Halas Trophy for the Walter Camp Player of the Year, the Dick McCann Memorial Trophy for the Coach of the Year, and the Pro Bowl. The logo change was announced at a press conference at the Super Bowl, and the helmet fonts were also introduced at that press conference, along with a couple of the team and league logos, and a new slogan ("America's Game.") That trio of logos is the subject of the rest of the new changes. The league's website has launched a redesign, while the old Bob Pettit Memorial Trophy and George S. Halas Award trophies have been retired, and the new winners will be presented with their trophies at the 2012 Super Bowl, along with Pro Bowl and Coach of the Year trophies. The NFL doesn't say why it decided to change the logo now, but as Peter noted on his Twitter feed, the NFL has talked a lot about the league's future, and the decision certainly seems like it has something to do with the league's future.
