Numerous reports have shown a relationship between bronchopulmonary complications and aortic dissection. However, intramural bronchial hematoma has never been described in patients with aortic dissection. We have reviewed the records of 137 patients with acute thoracic aortic dissection admitted to our hospital between January 1991 and December 1998. Bronchial hematoma was noted at pericardial puncture in five patients (3.6%). All patients with bronchial hematoma had cough without hemoptysis or dyspnea. One patient had mild chest pain. Lung auscultation was normal and there was no radiographic evidence of pulmonary parenchymal changes. The need for regular bronchial examination in patients with aortic dissection should be kept in mind. Competition interrupted; city, Eagles get underway Northridge and Santa Clarita's 2010 soccer season was delayed in early March when the league suspended its season following the March 2 earthquake in Haiti. In that time, both teams have been forced to compete on a shorter, less competitive
