Windows Server 2008 R2 Remote Desktop Services Licensing Crack [UPDATED]

i changed the licensing type in the server config to user, and the license count to 5. also, i changed the time period for the license server to 30 days from its default 60 days. i restarted the service and it worked. i can still use user licenses (5) in the server. i do not know why i had to change the licensing type, but i can now still use remote desk services in 2012. wait on the license server when experimenting with remote desk sessions to find out how many users you'll be able to support for each session, do not set up a fully functional and activated 2012 remote desk session host server displayed the following message: this was a simple setup on one server with the: connection. sep 1, 2016 - 5 min - uploaded by itibucaqhow to crack remote desk service on windows server 2012 r2. this fix help me get rid. i am having a situation where i have activated the license server with 120 day period on a 2012 r2 server. i have about 200 licenses on the server but when i go to select licensing mode in the remote desk service on the same server only 15 licenses are being displayed. i have a windows 2012 server vm in a windows 2016 cluster. my users are using remote desks to connect to the cluster from windows 8 desktops. i have a license server on each vm in the cluster. i activated the license server with a 120 day window in both the licensing server and the license server on the vm. the license server on the vm is showing that the total licenses is 200 and is still working. however, when i open the remote desk service on the cluster i only see the number of users that i have in my user group (i have 5). what's going on here?

windows server 2008 r2
with a remote desktop
license server role
installed. i have 2
windows 7 clients that connect to the server
with the same login
name and password as on the server. when the 2 clients log on i get a message that the login is not accepted. there is no problem with the login
